Analysis of articles appearing in 2005 and 2006 in two national dailies

Presentation at the MESEA conference,
Leiden, 2008

The relevance of the media image, the influence of the media

- There is no consensus within the literature
- Empirical studies: the failure of the hypodermic model
- Perspectives, which treat the audience as active and which imply minimal media effects are popular
- BUT even if we accept that media effects are complex phenomena and the audience is active – that does not mean that there is hardly any media effect!
- Theories of minimal effects often attribute too much power to the audience

Arguments for the relevance of media effects:

- It can cause mass hysteria (for example USA Rodney King case 1992)
- The role of the media can be different for different topics, for refugee affairs there is a great relevance of the media image:
 - News about minorities are received differently
 - Rate of personal information on refugees, asylum seekers is low
- Researches have found connections:
 - Between media image and attitudes towards refugees, asylum seekers
 - Between media image and attacks on refugees, asylum seekers

The direction of the media effect

IT CAN HAPPEN THAT:

positive image - contributes to negative judgement of a minority

BUT WHAT IS LIKELY:

negative image – contributes to negative judgment

Refugee affairs in the media – Previous research

- Negative, stereotypical image
- Treated as an official, legal, political issue
- Difference between local and national press
- Difference between liberal and conservative papers

Conclusions

- Refugee affairs treated as an “official” political matter (not as for e.g. a humanitarian issue)
- Dominance of articles showing problems, conflicts
- Negativity in the media is a general phenomenon – but its significance is different in relation to different topics: in case of the refugee topic the image shown by the media is of great relevance
- Differences between the image presented in the two dailies
